Through this method of instruction better teaching is possible, and the children become accustomed in some degree to high school methods of instruction, especially if there be supervised study, and promotion by subjects. In fact, it is often possible with a little adjustment to accomplish much the same ends that are obtained through a Junior High School without the addition of a ninth grade. This plan is extremely well adapted to the towns where there is no local high school and where the 6-3-3 plan is impossible. In the consolidated school special subjects such as music, drawing, domestic and manual arts, and in distinctly rural sections the study of agriculture, can be taught to the best advantage. These subjects are now considered an essential and practical...
